Rabbit

by Patricia Williams

It depicts a story about a girl that grew up neglected by her family and had her first child at the age of 14 and another at 15. In an effort to survive and care for her kids she becomes a drug dealer.

It's a very interesting story and one that is also inspiring. The writer is now a famous comedian has raised several children of other women in her family that couldn't care for their children due to addiction.

She was able to break the cycle of abuse and neglect to her own babies.

Of Boys and Men

by Richard V. Reeves

This book is going into a territory many will not go and that is how men are being impacted by the current trends in education, work, and family life. It sheds some light on the statistics on how men in the United States are doing presently and offers suggestions on how to support them to come back into a healthy relationship with themselves, their families and their community.

Demon Copperhead

by Barbara Kingsolver

A close retelling of David Copperfield, about a young boy who ends up in multiple placements, this book feels "raw" and true to me...

It's very compelling, difficult, challenging, educational and ultimately uplifting (otherwise I would not have suggested it). Many should read this and appreciate what it has to say...although, I understand, it will take a special audience to read it and recognize its value...as many struggle to "deal with" these kinds of issues.
